Participate in a Research Study

Reasonable Accommodations in the Workplace

Overview

We are conducting this study to determine the best way to educate people with disabilities on how to request an accommodation in the workplace. We are testing two educational strategies. The activities in this study will be online, so anyone in the United States who meets the criteria can participate.

Who Are We?

We are a team of researchers at the University of Washington who focus on disability rights and the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

Who Can Participate?

Participants will be adults with disabilities seeking an accommodation in employment at either the pre-employment or employment stage.

- Be 18 years or older
- Be actively seeking a job or currently employed
- Be a person with a disability who needs an accommodation at work
- Speak and read English

What Would I Do?

- Complete a pre-survey
- Use educational materials
- Complete a post-survey
- Some participants will be invited to participate in an interview

How Would I Benefit?

Participating in this study may help you to feel more prepared to request a reasonable accommodation at work. In addition, if you use the educational materials and complete the pre- and post-surveys, we will provide you with a $25 gift card. If you participate in an interview, we will provide you with an additional $25 gift card.

Getting Started

Interested in participating? Email us at ra2026@uw.edu

This study is funded by the National Institute on Disability, Independent Living, and Rehabilitation Research (NIDILRR). Human subjects review conducted by the University of Washington Institutional Review Board (Approval_STUDY00024708)